

The five-second rule for ideas

A good idea has about five seconds to live. Tie it to a small physical action right away, or your mind will talk you out of it.

REMEMBER

- ◆ You do not have an idea problem. You have an acting-on-ideas problem.
- ◆ The action can be tiny: write it down, send the message, put it on the calendar.
- ◆ Capture first, judge later. One trusted place for ideas beats a good memory.

YOUR TURN

Ideas I had this month and did nothing with:

The one place I will capture every idea from now on:

My five-second actions (write it, voice-note it, text it, schedule it):

When I will review my captured ideas each week:

One idea from the list above I will act on now:

THIS WEEK

Choose your one capture place. For seven days, put every idea there within five seconds of having it.
