

If you confuse, you lose

A clear message beats a clever one. If people have to work to understand what you offer, they move on.

REMEMBER

- ◆ People are not ignoring you. They do not yet understand what you do for them.
- ◆ Clear is kind. Clever makes people work.
- ◆ A story holds attention when a list of facts cannot.

YOUR TURN

What I do, in one sentence a twelve-year-old would understand:

Words on my website or posts that only people in my field would use:

The simplest way to say who I help, with what, and what changes for them:

A short customer story that shows it (who they were, the problem, what changed):

THIS WEEK

Show your home page to someone outside your field for five seconds. Ask them what you do. Rewrite until they can tell you.
