

What is your one headline?

People will not remember everything you tell them. Decide the one message you want them to leave with, and build everything around it.

REMEMBER

- ◆ More information does not make a message stronger. It makes it harder to remember.
- ◆ If you cannot say it in one sentence, your audience cannot repeat it.
- ◆ Everything else you say should support the headline or be left out.

YOUR TURN

My next talk, post, email or sales conversation is about:

Everything I am tempted to include:

The one thing I want them to remember tomorrow:

The three points that support it best:

What I will leave out:

THIS WEEK

Before your next email, post or presentation, write its headline first in one sentence. Cut anything that does not serve it.
