

Your words are only part of the message

People take in your tone and your presence along with your words. When they do not match, people believe the tone.

REMEMBER

- ◆ How you say it can undo what you say.
- ◆ Your team reads your mood before they hear your instructions.
- ◆ Check your tone and your attention before an important conversation.

YOUR TURN

A recent message that did not land the way I meant it:

What my tone, pace or body language may have said instead:

How I come across when I am stressed or rushed:

An important conversation coming up, and how I want the person to feel afterward:

What I will do with my voice and attention to match that:

THIS WEEK

Before one important conversation, pause for a minute. Decide how you want the person to feel, then put your phone away and give them your full attention.

Inspired by Richard Greene, "The 7 Secrets of the Greatest Speakers in History" (TEDx).