

Start with the problem, not the product

People do not buy products. They pay to have a problem solved. Start with the problem, then find the people who feel it most.

REMEMBER

- ◆ Fall in love with the problem, not with your product.
- ◆ A new feature is not innovation. Solving a real problem better is.
- ◆ If growth is slow, look for the people who feel the problem more urgently.

YOUR TURN

The problem my business solves, in my customer's words:

What that problem costs them (time, money, peace of mind):

Who feels this problem the most urgently?

Where I am describing my product instead of their problem:

My offer, rewritten to lead with the problem:

THIS WEEK

Ask three customers, "What was going on that made you look for help?" Write down their exact words.

Inspired by John Mullins, "6 Tips on Being a Successful Entrepreneur" (TED).