

Behavior is the expression of the problem, not the problem

When someone on your team is struggling, the behavior you see is rarely the real problem. Evaluate before you correct.

REMEMBER

- ◆ Missed deadlines and mistakes are signals. Ask what is behind them.
- ◆ Check the role, the training, the tools and the instructions before you judge the person.
- ◆ Evaluate and support first. Accountability works best once the cause is known.

YOUR TURN

The behavior that is frustrating me (my own or a team member's):

What might be behind it: role fit, training, tools, unclear instructions, capacity, something personal?

A question I can ask to understand, instead of correct:

What I could change in the system to make this easier to get right:

THIS WEEK

Before your next correction, ask one question: "What is getting in the way?" Then listen all the way through.
