

Production is the back end. Thinking is the front end.

The doing is production. It supports your work, but it is not what sets you apart. What sets you apart is how you help people think differently.

REMEMBER

- ◆ Production is your back end: the tool, the template, the steps, the deliverable.
- ◆ Your front end is the change in how your client thinks.
- ◆ Known only for production, you are compared on price and speed. Lead with thinking and there is no one to compare you to.

YOUR TURN

What I produce (the doing):

What I change in how people think:

When I describe my business today, which list am I leading with?

My description rewritten, with the thinking first:

Production work I could hand off, automate or simplify:

THIS WEEK

Write the one shift in thinking your best clients make because of you. Lead your next conversation with it.
