

Ask "who do I need to become?"

Lasting change does not come from willpower. It comes from how you see yourself. Change the story, and the habits have something to stand on.

REMEMBER

- ◆ New habits fail when the old identity is still in charge.
- ◆ "I am someone who..." is stronger than "I am trying to..."
- ◆ Ask of any old story about yourself: what if that is not true anymore?

YOUR TURN

A change in my business I keep starting and not sustaining:

The story I tell about myself that works against it ("I am not a numbers person," "I am not a salesperson"):

What if that story is not true anymore? Evidence against it:

Who I need to become. "I am someone who...":

One small thing that person does every week:

THIS WEEK

Write one sentence that begins "I am someone who..." and do one small thing each day that proves it.

Inspired by Kim Foster, "How to Actually Change Your Habits" (TEDx).